Intercultural communication globalization and social justice 2nd edition pdf

Kathryn Sorrells is Professor of Communication Studies at California State University, Northridge (CSUN). She chairs the department. Her academic focus includes intercultural communication, critical pedagogy, performance, cultural studies, and feminist theory. Kathryn teaches both undergraduate and graduate courses in these areas, combining critical/cultural studies and postcolonial perspectives to explore culture, race, gender, class, and sexuality. Kathryn has lived in various parts of the United States, studied/worked abroad (Brazil, Japan, Turkey, China), and traveled extensively throughout Asia, Europe, and Latin America. Her academic approach is rooted in her experiences growing up during the civil rights movement in the South and participating in social justice movements later on. Kathryn has published articles on intercultural communication, globalization, and social justice. She co-edited a reader titled "Globalizing Intercultural Communication: A Reader" (Sage, 2015). Kathryn led an initiative at CSUN focused on civil discourse and social change to educate students in civic engagement and social justice. She received awards for founding Communicating Common Ground, which helped students develop alternative solutions to intercultural conflicts. Kathryn is also experienced as a consultant and trainer for organizations focusing on intercultural communication and multicultural learning. The author, Kathryn Sorrells, has had extensive experience living in various regions of the United States as well as other countries like Brazil, Japan, Turkey, and China. Her travels have taken her through Asia, Europe, and parts of Latin America. Growing up in the South during a tumultuous period of civil rights movement significantly influenced her approach to intercultural communication. Her experiences participating in antiwar, women's, LGBT, labor, and immigrant rights movements further shaped her critical social justice perspective on intercultural communication. Kathryn has authored several articles related to globalization, social justice, and intercultural communication, and she co-edited "Globalizing Intercultural Communication: A Reader" with Sachi Sekimoto. Kathryn was instrumental in organizing an initiative at CSUN for Civil Discourse and Social Change. She received numerous awards for founding and directing Communicating Common Ground, a service learning project that offered students creative solutions to intercultural conflict. Additionally, she has experience as a consultant, trainer for various organizations on intercultural communication and multicultural learning. Kathryn Sorrells is the author of "Intercultural Communication: Globalization and Social Justice" and highlights the importance of understanding power dynamics, global institutions, and their impact on intercultural relationships. Her social justice approach encourages critical thinking, reflection, and action for a more equitable world through effective communication. The text has been updated to include new case studies and contemporary topics, making it a valuable resource in teaching intercultural communication. we appreciate kathryn sorrells contribution of an outstanding resource, which we have also had the opportunity to review the assets on our website. we would like to extend a special thank you to sachi sekimoto from minnesota state university, julie chekroun, gregory husak, rob loyalty, mandy paris, and hengameh rabizadah for their work in creating additional study materials.
